Dot Deco Glass

For a small tippie in the winter, or a frosted drink come summer, this dot-etched wine glass from Cochabamba in the Bolivian highlands is the one to reach for all year. Each is mouth-blown using 100% recycled glass. Crisil Srl.'s production standards ensure safety and comparatively high wages for its workers. Other small businesses collect and sort bottles to recycle, providing work to more people in the community.

About the Artisans

Crisil Srl - Bolivia

Crisil Srl. is a family-owned business based in Cochabamba. Most of the artisans live in an adjacent neighborhood, which has only been in existence for the past 20-25 years. Most of the neighborhood's residents struggle to find employment, and thus Crisil Srl. provides a valuable source of livelihood. The business uses recycled glass collected from local garbage dumps by small businesses that collect and sort the bottles. The supply chain thus provides work for many of the poorest people in the region. Glass is cleaned at Crisil and then melted in furnaces. Products are produced, checked, packed and largely sold in Bolivia from this facility. A linked workshop manages engraving and export packing. Artisans work in teams, 12 in total; on the work floor, each group has its own internal organization headed by a master glassblower or coordinator.
