Long-Grain Level Ground Rice

Ulikan Red, locally known as Mimis, Ulikan and Mini-angan, is a unique long-grain rice that cooks out thicker and somewhat stickier than conventional long grain rice. Ulikan Red has an “earthy” aroma when cooking, but a mild eating taste and a nice after taste.

Special Details:

Rice farmers are all subsistence people; they consume the majority of the rice they grow. 78% of the growers are women, most of whom have never had an opportunity to earn an income before. The farmers' holdings are typically less than 1/3 of a hectare.

In Balawis, 52 farmers have committed to producing 9000kgs of rice this season. This feat will require repairing the giant terrace walls, hand planting, fencing the terrace, and at harvest, walking each sack of rice down the mountain.

Travel the world with each visit to Ten Thousand Villages.
