About the Artisans

Asha Handicrafts Association

Asha, which means “hope” in Sanskrit, was started by professionals responding to the abject poverty of artisans, the problem of exploitative middlemen, and the disappearance of many traditional crafts. Asha’s work has encouraged the growth of cottage industries, assisting once-impooverished individuals and families towards self-sufficiency. Today, Asha works with over 6,500 artisans in India. Benefits to artisans include marketing, design consultancy, product development, advances, interest-free loans, savings programs, medical care, and educational scholarships, uniforms, and books for children. Training is given at the local level on such issues as AIDS, family planning, addictions, domestic violence and gender discrimination, as well as seminars related to business management skills. Asha empowers women by promoting products made by women and women also hold positions of authority and responsibility within the organization.

Holiday Flora Tablecloth

This stunning tablecloth in rich red and metallic gold will be the one you’ll reach for each season. Makers with artisan group Asha create the intricate pattern of winter foliage using a labour-intensive block printing method that requires patience and the artistic talents of a master block designer and carver. Asha works to ensure that benefits of handicraft production reach the workers themselves.
